Man accused of 'surfing' on top of commuter train

A man was spotted allegedly "surfing" on top of a commuter train while wearing a sombrero and a poncho Saturday night, Transit Police said.

The 28-year-old Worcester man, who appeared intoxicated, said he had been at a pub crawl in Boston. Transit police said his body was half over the top of a ladder, "like a child clinging over a shopping cart." His name will not be released until he is summonsed to court. GLOBE

Violent confrontation

Fight outside Cambridge eatery ends in stabbing

A Medford man was arrested for allegedly stabbing two people during a fight outside a Cambridge restaurant over the weekend.

Police were called to Moska in Central Square at about 1:45 a.m. Saturday. Police found two people fighting as a crowd of about 100 people watched. When officers broke up that fight, another one involving three men broke out. It ended with two men suffering non-life-threatening stab wounds to the back and hand. METRO

Revere Beach body still without ID, cops seek help

Look familiar?
Authorities released pictures of the man's clothes with the hope that someone will recognize them.

Investigators are hoping these American Eagle jeans and boxers with a Volkswagen Beetle on them will help lead them to the man's identity. / SUFFOLK DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE

Authorities are asking for help in their attempt to identify a man whose body washed up recently on Revere Beach and have released pictures of some of the clothes the man was wearing.

Investigators on Monday released photos of the man's pants and boxer shorts, hoping someone will be able to recognize the unique aspects of them.

A passerby found the remains washed ashore on April 30.

Gruesome find

Identity sought in mysterious death

Last Wednesday, at about 11:30 a.m., a passerby on Revere Beach noticed something in the water just at the shoreline. It turned out to be the remains of an adult man.

Authorities have said there was no identifying information on the person and that an exact age and ethnicity could not be determined because of the condition of the remains.

Investigators are trying to locate the man's family or friends and are reviewing missing persons reports.

They have also notified law enforcement agencies across the state with the hope of identifying the deceased person.

Anyone with information can call 617-727-8817.

"The conditions of the remains has thus far hindered investigators' efforts to identify the man or determine his ethnicity," the Suffolk district attorney's office said in a statement.

A forensic investigation has so far revealed that the man was between 20 and 40 years old and likely on the younger end of that range.

A Kryptonite bicycle lock key was found in the man's jeans. The jeans were American Eagle brand blue jeans with a 30-inch waist, cinched with a black, braided leather belt.

Additionally, the man was wearing boxer shorts with the image of a Volkswagen Beetle on them.

The cause and manner of death are still under investigation.

"Somewhere, there may be a mother, father, son or daughter suffering the worst kind of uncertainty," said Suffolk District Attorney Dan Conley in a statement. "If we can identify this man, we can at least put an end to that waiting and worrying and allow them some closure. Even if members of the public don't have specific information, they can share these details online and, perhaps, help us reach the loved ones who need to know."

Police officer hurt in motorcycle crash

Investigators upright the officer's motorcycle. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

A Boston police officer was hurt Monday morning in a motorcycle crash in Dorchester.

The officer, who was not identified, was taken to Brigham and Women's Hospital with injuries that were not considered life-threatening. There was no word on what caused the crash, which happened at the intersection of Columbia Road and Glendale Street around 9:15 a.m.

The crash reportedly involved a silver sedan. Part of Columbia Road was blocked off as police investigated.

Channel 7 reported that the officer was escorting a priest to Logan International Airport at the time of the accident, and that the officer collided with the priest's car, but police would not confirm that.

There was no update on the officer's condition as of press time. No other injuries were reported. METRO

SJC to decide fate of casino repeal

Waiting game. The state's highest court isn't expected to rule for months.

The effort to repeal the state's expanded gambling law is now in the hands of the state's highest court.

Lawyers for the casino repeal effort and the state argued before the state Supreme Judicial Court on Monday in an attempt to persuade the justices on whether voters can decide to repeal the expanded gaming law.

Members of the repeal effort have sued Attorney General Martha Coakley's office after the agency rejected their ballot initiative to have the voters decide in November whether to overturn the state's 2011 expanded gaming law.

Justices questioned Attorney Thomas Bean, a lawyer for the repeal effort, as to whether they should consider the proposed ballot question even after the Massachusetts Gaming Commission has already awarded a slots parlor license.

"So a five-year exclusive license that has already been awarded after a thorough process as outlined by the legislature, at great cost to the applicant, can simply be taken away with a big 'never mind,'" asked Justice Robert Cordy.

"Yes," Bean replied.

In a brief filed before Monday's oral arguments, state Solicitor Peter Sacks, representing the attorney general's office, wrote that the proposed ballot question and law could not be certified because it takes private property, in the form of an implied contract between the gaming commission and the applicant, without any compensation.

The court was expected to take weeks or months before issuing a ruling.

Quoted

"There is a very strong policy disagreement here about what should happen and that is simply one more reason why this matter should go to the voters."

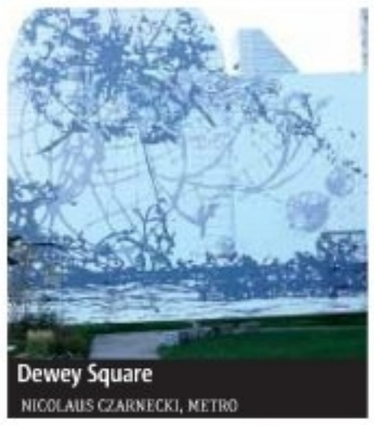
Boston Calling Block Parties series to kick off in Dewey Square

Free music. Music lovers can look forward to a weekly dose of cold beer and live local tunes.



Dewey Square
NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

The Boston Calling Block Parties series is set to kick off Thursday at Dewey Square in the Rose Kennedy Greenway, organizers announced Monday in a Facebook post.

This is the first year the free weekly series will take place in Dewey Square; the parties were previously held on Summer Street in Downtown Crossing. According to organizers, the outdoor events will include music by local bands, cold beer, food trucks, a farmers market, "green grass [and] good times."

Boston-based club band The Swinging Johnsons will open the series, and the summer lineup will be gradually unveiled at Bostoncalling.com.

Brian Appel of Crashline Productions said that organizers decided to move the series due to Summer Street construction, and Dewey Square offers a lot of space.

"Bands will be varied: everything from cover bands, reggae bands, indie bands, etc. We are open to submissions as well from local bands via our Facebook page," Appel said in an email.

The Thursday night concerts run from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. through Sept. 25, weather permitting.

The concerts are open to the public, but guests must be at least 21 to attend.

The concert series coincides with Boston Calling's spring and fall three-day music festivals, which will take place May 23 through May 25, and Sept. 5 through Sept. 7 on City Hall Plaza.

RI circus collapse probe focusing on clamp: Official

Accident. The Occupational Safety and Health Administration is investigating the cause of the collapse.

Investigators probing the collapse of a rigging at a Providence, Rhode Island, circus that badly injured nine performers and stunned the audience were focused on Monday on a clamp that snapped, a city official said.

Eight acrobats remained hospitalized, two in critical condition, following the Sunday incident, when the rig holding them hanging by their hair collapsed in front of an audience of about 3,900 people, including young children.

"We have identified the clamp [holding them to the rafters] that snapped and failed," Providence Public Safety Commissioner Steven Pare told WPRO-AM radio in Providence on Monday.

Pare could not be reached immediately to elaborate. But officials from Feld Entertainment, which owns the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus, said it was too soon identify the cause of the collapse.

"The comments by the commissioner in Providence are premature at this point," circus spokesman Stephen Payne said. "We hope to release more information at the conclusion of the investigation into what caused the accident."

In addition to the two performers in critical condition, three were in serious condition and three others in good condition, according to a spokeswoman for Rhode Island Hospital, where the acrobats were brought after the collapse. Another performer was treated and released on Sunday.

Some of the injuries the performers suffered were severe, "but none appear to be life-threatening at this time," Payne said in an email. REUTERS

Levine looks like every platinum blond who ever lived

Don't hate Levine and Prinsloo because they're beautiful. Hate them because they're not that original. / ADAM LEVINE, TWITTER

When Pretty McPrettyboy Adam Levine tweeted out the photo on the left of his new hairstyle (along with his pillow-lipped fiancee, Behati Prinsloo) on Saturday, everyone got pretty mad that he would go ahead and ruin that pretty face of his. So mad that "Adam Levine" started trending. However, the Maroon 5 singer took it all in stride. "I hope people understand that when they say my hair looks creepy I take that as the highest compliment," he wrote about the hairy backlash.

However, Levine must know that he looks like a certain … someone. Maybe even a few someones? We compiled the women — and men — he now resembles. Anyone we're missing? Write in to let us know.

Nasty Gal CEO shares unlikely success story

Interview. We talk to the wildly successful Sophia Amoruso about her new book, "#GirlBoss."

Just 10 years ago, Nasty Gal CEO Sophia Amoruso was dumpster diving, shoplifting, hitchhiking and drifting from job to job. Now, she is the CEO of a $100 million retail business and author of "#GIRLBOSS," an honest account of her unconventional career path.

Your book couldn't be more different from "Lean In."
If it's a man's world, who cares? It's kind of like, "Yes, lean in, but you don't need to talk about it." The energy you use talking about it, you could use to actually lean in.

You don't give steps or a plan to readers on how to be successful. Why is that?
I just want people to learn from my experiences. You can learn from other people's successes and failures.

Do you have any tips for young women who don't know what they want to do yet?
You just have to keep trying things. I thought I was going to be a photographer. Had I tried to control that too much and said, "Screw this eBay thing," I don't know if I would have fulfilled any level of a dream.

Do you think it was to your advantage that you never had many mentors?
There's a lot to learn from what other people have done, but there's also a lot to doing things your own way.

Do you regret living a wild life before getting serious?
Unfortunately, I think I was naive enough to have to learn about the world by putting myself in situations like that.

Brown will join celebrities such as Laura Bush, Whoopi Goldberg and Jay Leno this weekend at the biannual Life@50+ National Event & Expo at the Boston Convention & Exhibition Center.

On Saturday, she will talk about the new AARP Travel Experience and give advice about places to see, trip ideas and, of course, travel tips. Admission for AARP members is $25 and $35 for nonmembers. Vacation like a European Explore. The American way of overscheduling won't fly overseas.

Forget everything you've read about planning a European trip: It's not practical to cram every museum and landmark into your weeklong vacation. It's better to have a routine and only hit two big things a day, suggests The Travel Channel's Samantha Brown.

"Always overprepare," Brown says, "but never overschedule."

Sure, you should hit famous European museums — such as The Louvre in Paris and London's British Museum — but "don't spend all your time in the past," Brown says.

"You're there to enjoy what's happening now," she says. "It's perfectly acceptable to spend an hour in the Louvre. Waiting in line is not the French experience."

Also, curb Instagramming every aspect of your trip, she advises, and slow down.

"Let your own sense of discovery take you places," Brown adds. "Sit down at a cafe because you want to be there."

And take an hour or so to walk the neighborhoods each day. Have a glass of wine at a cafe you just stumble upon. It's important to not only feel like you're on vacation, but to feel like you belong.

Book smart

Start researching your trip about six months out and book it a month after that, Brown suggests. Set up alerts on fare changes through travel websites. Book a red-eye flight; you can get that first night's sleep on the plane. Also, travel during "shoulder seasons" — the time between high and low season.

Brown recommends traveling during the "shoulder season," between high and low seasons. / FUSE

Research

Take notes on what you want to do and what you'd like to see, but be OK with throwing it all out the window, too.

"When I get to a destination," Brown says, "after the first day, I sit down with my maps and research and look at my trip from a realistic standpoint. Now you're in reality; that's going to change a lot. You can still be spontaneous with your research."

What to pack

Make sure you pack for the weather, but don't go overboard. Comfortable shoes and layers are a must, but Brown advises against dressing like a tourist. "You can wear sneakers, you can wear jeans — just not at the same time."

Off the beaten path

Brown's faves

These are Brown's favorite parts of some European destinations.

1. Paris: Check out a small museum called The Musee de l'Orangerie, an art gallery of impressionist and post-impressionist paintings. Here, you'll find works by Monet, Picasso and more. You can tour it in about an hour.
2. London: Stop by cabmen's huts when in England. They are small green huts that cab drivers used to stop at, park their cabs and get something to eat and drink. "It's a slice of life," Brown says.
3. Berlin: Kunsthaus Tacheles houses graffiti-style murals and art sculptures. "It's a great place to see current local art."

Get yourself some common sense for Mother's Day

Re: 'For your mama dearest' (Metro, May 1) I love my mother very much and I want to get her something nice for Mother's Day to show her the appreciation I have for her bringing me into the world — but I'm not sure who would beat me in the head first, my mother, my father or myself, if I spend $400 on a blanket for Mother's Day. Who in their right mind would spend $400 on a blanket, period? If that blanket isn't cooking my food and cleaning my house, it costs $80 or less. (P.S. I understand benefiting female artisans in Rwanda and that's great, but those earrings are not only too large for an elephant's head, let alone a human's, they are HIDEOUS. I would never, ever buy my mother something so ugly —not even for a good cause. I mean, I'd rather stick St. Jude's free-with-donation labels on her ears, they're much prettier.) A climate of stifled speech

Re: 'Climate confusion' (Metro, May 2) I would like to ask letter writer Adam Greenberg whether he believes a free press should decline to publish any dissenting viewpoints in the future? Then he would save us all the tiresome burden of debate and the exchange of ideas. BOB PHILLIPS, VIA EMAIL

Re: 'Climate confusion' (Metro, May 2) Letter writer Adam Greenberg presents the typical liberal response to man-made climate change skeptics: insult the dissenters and try to stifle all debate. Sorry, but the debate isn't over as long as there are those who don't wish billions in tax dollars being spent to tilt at windmills. What happened to all those "predictions" of climate catastrophe? Science usually is driven by facts. Climate change "science" is driven by hysteria and suppression of facts. FRANK DIXON, VIA EMAIL

Habs fan finds Price's pooches

Montreal goaltender Carey Price tweeted out early Monday morning that his dogs, two labs were missing. Canadiens fan John Mastromonaco heard a report on the radio about Price's situation and soon saw two stray dogs following a jogger around 6 a.m. on Monday. Mastromonaco returned the dogs to Price's home and got an autographed hockey stick for his efforts.

Bruins must be better out of gate in Montreal

NHL. The B's have plenty of room for improvement in Game 3 on Tuesday.

Bruins forward Shawn Thornton gives Montreal defenseman P.K. Subban a shove in the third period of Game 2 on Saturday. / GETTY IMAGES

By virtue of losing Game 1 of the Eastern Conference semifinals to Montreal, Boston guaranteed it will have to win at least one game at the Bell Centre if it wants to move on to the Eastern Conference Finals for the third time in four years. The Bruins get their first opportunity on Tuesday (7 p.m., NBCSN) in Game 3, with the series tied 1-1.

There are a couple of key areas that Boston has to tighten up going forward as any team simply cannot rely on rallying from two-goal deficits in every contest; certainly against a quality opponent like the Canadiens.

The obvious stat that jumps off the page through two games is that Montreal is 4-for-9 on the power play while Boston is 0-for-5. The Bruins always seem to struggle on special teams vs. Montreal and the Canadiens conversely excel in that regard.

Canadiens star defenseman P.K. Subban is the quarterback of their power play, as proven by his two goals in Game 1 and two assists in Game 2, all on the man advantage.

"That's where we have to get better, we have to take away that shooting lane," Bruins head coach Claude Julien said of Subban's shot.

Finally, it's important for the B's to get off to a good start in the first two periods in Game 3. In Game 1, they trailed 2-0 heading into the third before outscoring the Canadiens 3-1 and forcing overtime. In Game 2, Boston at least scored first, but it was still down 2-1 going into the third and was down 3-1 midway through the final frame.

Quoted

"At the end of the day, we just have to go out there and play our game. It's important for us not to think [about the difficulty of playing in Montreal]. It's important for us to not let those distractions get in our heads."

Claude Julien, Bruins head coach

NHL. Bruins goaltender Rask welcomes firstborn child prior to Game 3

Bruins goaltender Tuukka Rask is a busy man these days.

Before heading to Montreal to face the Canadiens in Game 3 of the Eastern Conference semifinals, Rask was able to witness the birth of he and his girlfriend's first child, a baby girl.

The Bruins reportedly would have had a private plane in Montreal available for Rask to return to Boston if the baby was born later this week. The Bruins did not say whether or not backup goaltender Chad Johnson would have gotten the call to start in net this week had Rask's girlfriend given birth to the baby on a game day.

Rask has a .939 save percentage this postseason. METRO

Opinion

RYAN HADFIELD
SPORTS@METRO.US

We often confuse "best" and "favorite" to mean the same thing. These qualifiers offer praise, but they're mutually exclusive to one another. For instance, "Mad Men" is the best show on television right now. It challenges you to think about television on an intellectual level you never knew existed before you begin watching it. The writing, character development and structure are all otherworldly. However, the superiority of "Mad Men" doesn't make it particularly enjoyable inasmuch as it's simply compelling, and I certainly wouldn't call it my "favorite" show to watch on a weekly basis.

The NHL currently suffers from this paradox. The league will never overtake the NFL in popularity. I get that. But it's difficult to make the argument that there's a better postseason in sports than what the NHL currently offers. The players throw their bodies in front of shots and fight one another on a regular basis. The refs generally manage to stay out of the way. The viewing experience is enhanced by limited commercial breaks. Best of all, while the outcome feels so arbitrary (one random bounce could mean the difference between winning and losing), hockey has a strange way of rewarding the better team over the course of a seven-game series.

Bruins forward Milan Lucic presses the head of Alexei Emelin over the net in Game 2 last Saturday in Boston. / BOSTON GLOBE

The first two games of the 34th playoff installment in the Bruins-Canadiens rivalry embodied all of this awesomeness for three reasons:

1 The Perfect Villain
P.K. Subban is just an incredible adversary. And the dude wasted no time establishing himself last Thursday night, either — overtly punching Reilly Smith in the opening moments of Game 1. The feisty defenseman then capped off his night with two power-play goals, including the game-winner in overtime.

2 Competing Styles
Why was the Broncos-Seahawks matchup in Super Bowl XLVIII so interesting? Because it reminded us that substance beats flash. In this series, there's a finesse team and a physical team. Watching these sports ethos play out is fascinating, and for Bruins fans, it's gratifying to root for the team that prides itself on being the bully. It's dirty and brash and delightful to watch all at once.

3 Great Drama
The Bruins trailed most of Game 1, but they outskated Montreal for much of the game. If it weren't for Carey Price and the goalposts, we likely don't see overtime. Regardless, is there any way this series doesn't go seven games? And is there any way you don't break at least one remote control in the next week?

Metro does not endorse the opinions of the author.

Patriots upgrade at defensive end, sign Smith

The Patriots' pass rush has left much to be desired in recent years and the lack of pressure on opposing quarterbacks was on full display in their AFC Championship game loss to the Denver Broncos last season.

The Pats are hoping free agent defensive end Will Smith will cure some of its issues on the defensive line. The former New Orleans Saint signed with the Patriots on Monday, though the details on the deal were not disclosed.

The 32-year-old Smith missed all of 2013 after tearing his ACL last August.

Smith, a 2004 Saints first-round pick out of Ohio State, was a Pro Bowl performer in 2006 when he recorded 10.5 sacks. MATT BURKE
